Help protect your dreams by safeguarding your income

For most of us, our ability to earn an income is the most important financial asset we have. By protecting your income, you help ensure your ability to pay your current bills and reach important financial goals if you become disabled. With so much at stake, it's easy to understand the importance of helping to protect your income now.

This brochure can help you get started. It answers important questions about disability income insurance protection. Your financial advisor can help you with options, features and benefits of a disability income insurance policy.

Q: What are the chances that a disability will happen to me?

A: Unfortunately, the truth is that there is a good chance that disability may affect you. Consider this:

- Just over 1 in 4 of today's 20 year-olds will become disabled before retirement age.¹

Q: Won't Social Security benefits replace my income if I am disabled?

A: For many, the answer is no. And for those who do qualify, the disability benefits provided by the Social Security Administration are often limited.

- Can your family live on $1,483 a month? That's the average monthly benefit paid by SSDI in December 2022.²

Q. Is the amount of disability income insurance I get at work enough?

A: Employer-sponsored coverage can be a great start but it may fall short of covering all it could:

- Group coverage typically replaces just 60% of lost base salary.
- Bonuses, commissions, employer retirement plan contributions and other incentive compensation beyond base salary are not usually covered.
- Group benefits are often taxable when the premium is employer-paid — further reducing your disability benefit amount — and group coverage goes away if you leave your job.
- With individual disability income insurance, you own your coverage. It doesn't go away if your job changes, and periods of unemployment won't interrupt your income protection.

Q: Is using my savings an option to pay expenses if I am unable to work?

A: Even a substantial emergency fund may not be enough, because:

- No one knows how long a disability might last and a savings account could be drained long before you are able to return to work. In addition, drawing from your savings or investments jeopardizes other financial goals.
- If you are on disability, you can't make contributions to your employer's retirement plan. In addition, you miss out on retirement plan contributions made by your employer — setting your retirement goal back even further.

Reduce the income protection gap

Protecting your income is an important step to help ensure you have a dependable income source if you become disabled. When combining employer-sponsored disability income insurance with individual disability income insurance, you can help protect your income.

Case study:

Mary earns an annual base salary of $60,000 and a $40,000 annual bonus. Her net monthly income after taxes is $6,855. Mary filed single with standard deductions and one personal exemption.

In scenario A, Mary has 60% of her annual base salary covered with her employer-sponsored disability income insurance group plan. This leaves her with a monthly income protection gap of $4,219 in the event of a disability.

In scenario B, Mary’s monthly individual disability income insurance coverage of $3,305 in addition to her group disability coverage of $2,636 can reduce her income gap.

Q: How much does it cost to buy disability income insurance?

A: Generally for as little as 2% to 3% of your salary, you can cover up to 80% of your after-tax income during a disability.

- You'll save on taxes. When you buy your own disability income insurance with after-tax dollars, 100% of the benefits are income tax free.
- You can help protect more of your actual earnings, because individual disability income insurance covers bonus and/or commission income.

Cost to protect your income

It can cost little to help protect your most important financial asset — your income.

Just 2% to 3% of gross income can protect up to 80% of net after-tax income.
